Filmmaker Sean Cain got in touch with Fango to provide us with a few exclusive production pics from the final day of shooting on his recently wrapped undead flick SILENT NIGHT, ZOMBIE NIGHT. You can see 'em below, along with the new key art (by Jason Beam) and a rather gory teaser trailer for the indie feature, which we last reported on here; he also shared the word on his next feature.

Cain, who's currently editing SILENT NIGHT, ZOMBIE NIGHT (which stars Vernon Wells, Jack Forcinito and Nadine Stenovitch as a trio terrorized by the ghouls), will be present at this weekend's LA Weekend of Horrors (sharing a table with LIVE EVIL producer Mark Terry), and tells us that the film's trailer "will run right before the 8 p.m. Saturday screening of director Jay Woelfel's LIVE EVIL, as well as looping at our table.

"We're still in postproduction," Cain continues, "and we've officially hired Jaye Barnes Luckett [whose credits include Lucky McKee's MAY and MASTERS OF HORROR episode SICK GIRL] as our composer. Now that the trailer is finished, we'll be talking with distribution companies, as well as prepping for BREATH OF HATE in the summer." The latter, a feature written and to be directed by Cain this June, revolves around Love, an erotic escort who is seeking a change in career. Unfortunately, her final booking is for a trio of escaped mental patients "who define torture as high art and want to turn Love into their latest masterpiece," Cain explains.
